Owning a pet in today's world has become so common that nearly every home you walk into, you will find a pet. Dogs, especially, are the perfect addition to a family. They bring joy and make a family happy, taking care of dogs come with the additional package. There is a lot you will endure to make your dog's life comfortable, but luckily there is an easy way out.

A dog door is an essential addition to your existing door, especially when you have a dog. With it, your dog has the freedom to leave and enter the house whenever they want. They go outside and play when they want and come back when they like. Additionally, you will be able to maintain the cleanliness of your home.

Now that you have learned the importance of dog door and the essential role it plays in your home, the question now comes, what makes a dog door perfect? The following three factors should be considered when choosing a pet door, and how you tailor the door with respect to them will either make it grate or not.

- Size
- Climate
- Door location

Size of the Door

The size of the dog door matters a lot. Figuring out the right size plays a vital role in determining whether your dog will use it in the future. If the size is too small, it can be uncomfortable, and your dog may not be able to use it. On the other hand, if it is too big, it can provoke feelings of intimidation to your dog. So when purchasing one, make sure it meets the following standards.

- It should be tall enough to avoid unnecessary crouching.
- It should be low so that your dog does not need to jump.
- It should be wide enough so that your dog does not squeeze in and out.

Suppose the door is for multiple dogs, ensure that the step-over height does not exceed 1/3 of the shortest dog height, and the top of the door opening is at least 1 inch taller than the tallest dog.

If your home has a sliding glass door, then don't worry because we have pet doors for sliding glass doors too. And the installation process is not complicated at all, you can even do it yourself.

Climate

The harsh climate and adverse weather can make you skeptical about installing a doggie door, but do you know you can still do it without worrying about the weather getting inside? The solution is doggy doors with tight seals and proper insulation. Pet Door Products are energy-efficient and have an efficient locking system too.

When looking for energy-efficient pet doors, look for insulated, double flap system weather stripping, and airtight seal on its frame. It should also have the magnets attached at the edges of the flap to withstand high winds. Once you purchase it, install it as it is. Any alteration made can interfere with the efficiency.

Location of the Pet Door

When installing the door, choose the location that would work best for your home and the dog. After you have identified the safe enclosure for your dog, make sure that the door provides easy access to that area. Additionally, steps can provide more comfort when the dog is getting in or out, so add it.
